

Alison Kennedy
Managing Director, Southeast Asia, Accenture

Alison Kennedy has more than two decades of experience in business across Asia, Europe and the US, working with executives and leadership teams in sectors from banking and asset management to insurance and healthcare. Over the last decade Alison has been at the heart of the digital revolution, responsible for designing and executing some of the most successful and innovative corporate transformations in Asia. As part of the Global Leadership Council in Accenture, Alison is one of a small number of senior leaders who have been at the helm of Accenture as the company moved from a private partnership to one of the worlds most respected companies with 699,000 employees in more than 120 countries. A passionate believer in the power of human ingenuity and technology to make the world better, Alison practices what she preaches in Accenture and in clients. Alison has published on a variety of topics including Digital, AI, Talent and Sustainability. She lives in Singapore and sits on a number of advisory boards including at The London School of Economics where she is an Alumni.